Severe Weather Outlook

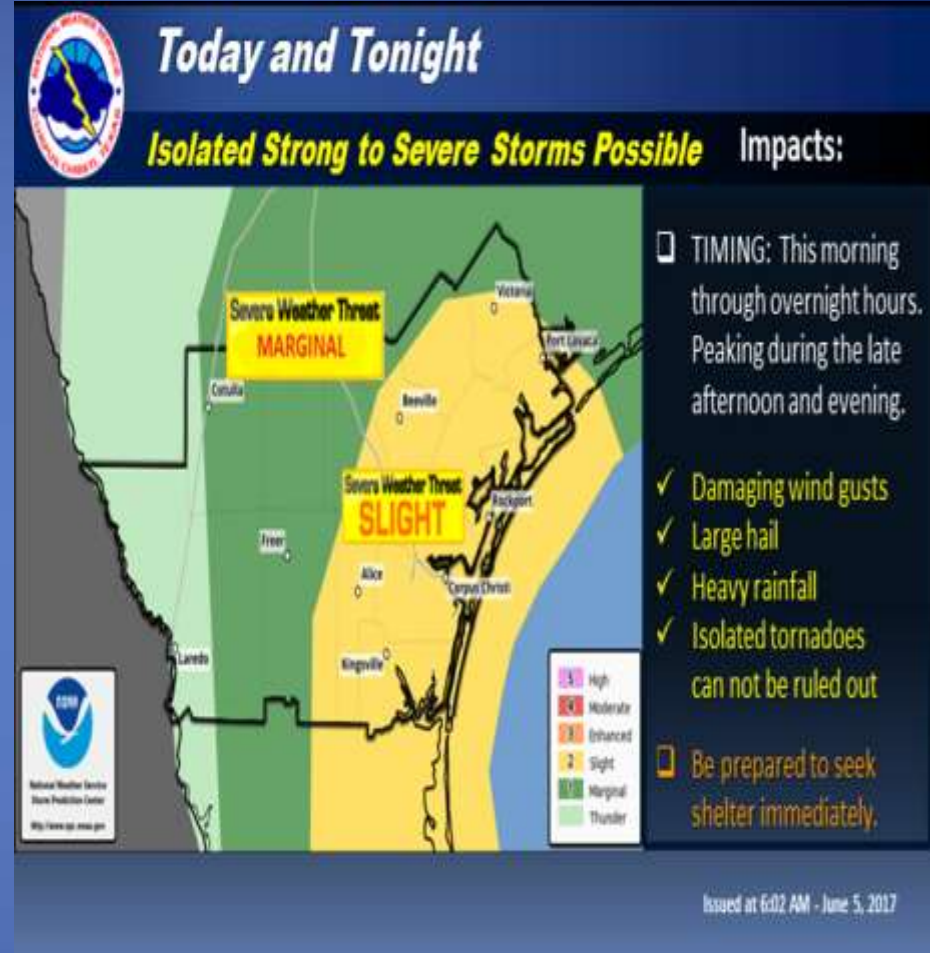

Monday, June 05, 2017

Hazardous Weather

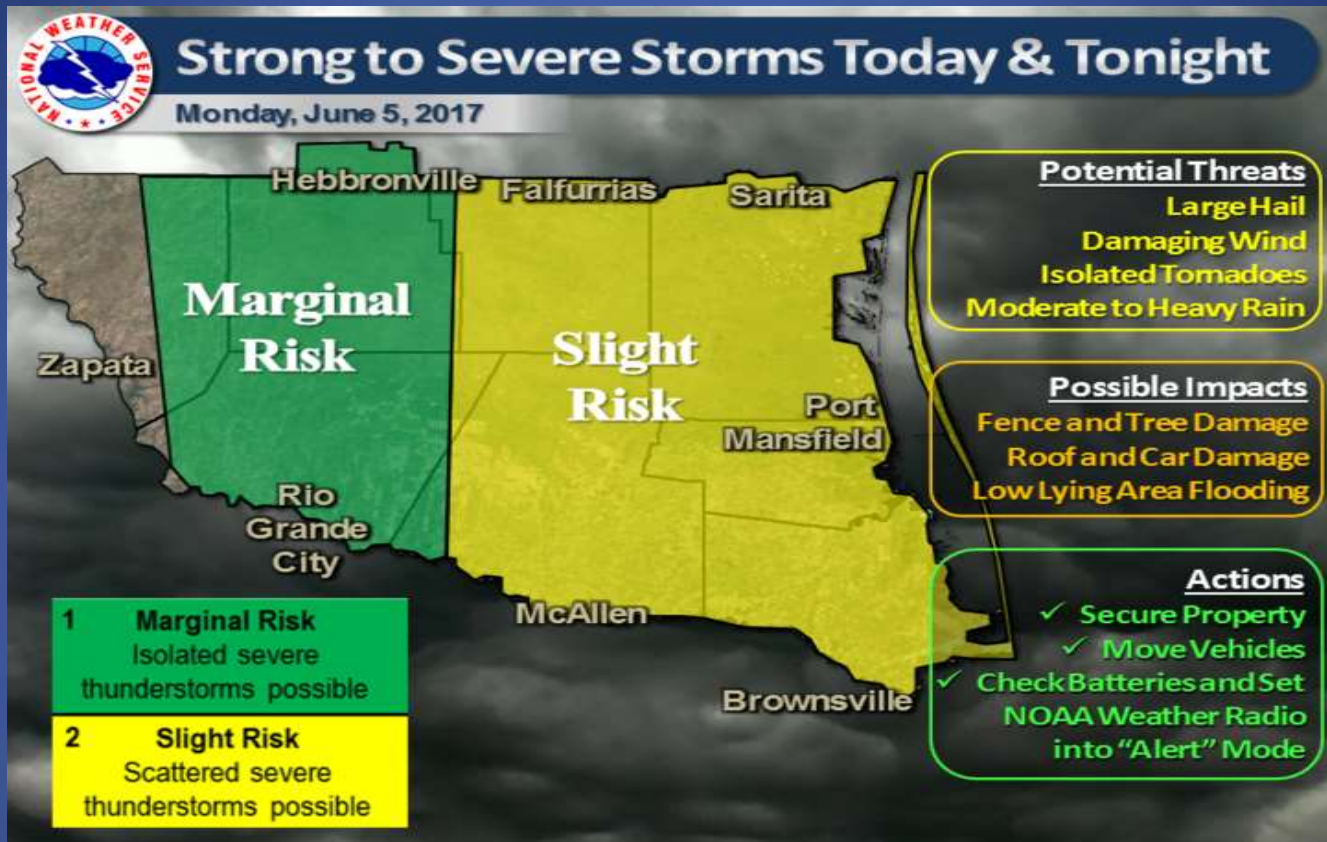

More scattered showers and storms are expected across North and Central Texas today (Monday). Flooding continues to be the main concern, especially where heavy rainfall falls on already saturated areas. DO NOT drive into flooding areas/roads!! Small hail and gusty winds may also occur with stronger storms.

Keep an eye on the radar today! The potential for strong to severe thunderstorms will exist, peaking during the afternoon and evening hours.

Hazardous Weather

Strong to severe thunderstorms will be expected today into tonight across deep south Texas and the Rio Grande Valley. The best potential for severe storms will be in the eastern half of the region this afternoon and evening. The main threats include large hail and damaging winds; however, with any severe thunderstorm, potential threats include isolated tornadoes, moderate to heavy rain and frequent cloud to ground lightning. Possible impacts of severe weather include fence, tree, roof and home damage. Low lying areas or poorly draining areas may be at risk for flooding from any heavier downpours. To be prepared for severe weather: make sure trees are trimmed of dead branches, fences are secured, tie down lightweight objects, move vehicles into garages or carports, check the batteries and set your NOAA Weather Radio into the 'Alert' Mode. Additionally, make sure the family knows where the safest place is located in the case of severe weather and the plan to get there if a warning is issued.
